| Comments: The piano has J.P. Seeburg cast into the frame instead of Western Electric. The original top and lower (single panel type) fronts are missing, and have been replaced with home made frames containing large sheets of red and green Plexiglas. The player mechanism appears to have had some work done at some time in the distant past, but it still has most of the original tracker bar tubing which is solidified. A suction box has been added, but the piano does not play at all presently. The piano action with its original hammers, the case, and piano strung back all appear to be in very good condition. Motor is not original; has an Ampico grand motor installed. Piano was purchased by its former owner in a restaurant auction in or around Washington, DC around 2010. It was found advertised for sale in November 2015 at their home in Silver Spring, MD, just outside of Washington, DC. |        |             |             |           |         |

| Comments: No name cast in piano plate. Purchased in 1967 by Don MacDonald from its original location, the Shamrock Tavern in Namioka, Illinois. The day after MacDonald acquired it and removed it from the tavern, a kitchen grease fire destroyed the building. Don repaired it and sold it to the Trent Motel and Restaurant in Ballwin, Missouri in 1969. In 2013, he was able to acquire it again and plans to give it a complete restoration. |        |             |             |           |         |

| Comments: Piano hammer date stamp is only on two original (removed and in my possession) hammers (19 and 20). An inked line may represent a portion of a "U" prior to the "N," but cannot confirm. The rest of the date is inked clearly and boldly. Full restoration by D.C. Ramey, 12/2011-05/2012. David Ramey Jr. installed a simple device on the xylophone that mechanically keeps the reiterating pallet valves from working when you want it to play single stroke. When it moves back out of the way, the xylophone reiterates as usual. |        |             |               |           |         |
